9. May those who are our foes be driven off; may we through Indra and Agni destroy them; may the Vasus, the Rudras, and the Adityas make me the high-reaching, fierce, intelligent, supreme ruler.¹

ANUVĀKA XI.

Sūkta I. (CXXIX.)

The deity is Paramātma, the author of the creation, preservation and dissolution of the various entities (bhūtas), these being the subjects treated of in the hymn; the Rishi is Paramātma, under his appellation Parameshūthin.

Varga XVII. 1. The non-existent was not, the existent was not; then the world was not, nor the firmament, nor that which is above (the firmament). How could there be any investing envelope,¹ and where? Of what (could there be) felicity?² How (could there be) the deep unfathomable water?³

2. Death was not nor at that period immortality, there was no indication of day or night; That One unbreathed upon breathed of his own strength,⁴ other than That there was nothing else whatever.

3. There was darkness covered by darkness in the beginning, all this (world) was undistinguishable water; that empty united (world) which was covered by a mere nothing, was produced through the power of austerity.⁵

² To render this phraseology intelligible we must restrict the meanings of sat and asat ("ens" and "non-ens") to visible and invisible existence, or in Hindu cosmology to matter and spirit (prakṛiti and puruṣa), which in the Vaidik system would not, as in the Śāṅkhyas, have a distinct existence, but would be blended and lost in the one invisible, immaterial, incomprehensible First Cause, or Brahma, in the intervals of creation. The language used in describing this is usually somewhat vague, but the notion is evidently that the First Cause was in the beginning undeveloped in its effects, and existed before either inactive matter or active spirit, considered as distinct; it is not intended to be said that no cause or origin, no Author of the universe, existed before creation, but that nothing else existed, neither matter nor spirit, and consequently that He created both: see the Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 12, where a similar passage is cited from the Veda, and this passage also is quoted by the commentator (Ibid. note 16): though it is not perhaps quite accurately explained.

⁴ The Scholiast refers to the Purāṇas for an explanation, and accordingly see Vishṇu Purāṇa, p. 16, and note 25. Each element as created or developed is invested by its rudiment.
⁵ i.e. of whom or of what living being could enjoyment, or fruition, whether of pain or pleasure, be predicated, there being no life?
⁶ Sāyaṇa explains away another text, idam agra salilam daś “this in the beginning was water,” by saying that that referred to another period.
⁷ Sāyaṇa takes svadād as meaning Māyā or Prakṛiti (Illusion or Nature), the source of the world of phenomena. He understands uttara “breathed along with Māyā.”
⁸ Tejas is said to mean not penance, but the contemplation of the things which were to be created.
4. In the beginning there was desire, ¹ which was the first seed of mind; sages having meditated in their hearts have discovered by their wisdom the connexion of the existent with the non-existent.

5. Their ray ² was stretched out, whether across, or below, or above; ³ (some) were shedders of seed, (others) were mighty; food was inferior, the eater was superior.

² [This, according to Sāyaṇa, refers to the suddenness of creation, which was developed in the twinkling of an eye, like the flash of the sun's ray. It was so quick, he continues, that it was doubtful whether the things in the central space (understood by the word "across") were created first, or those above or those below; in other words, creation took place simultaneously in all three portions of the universe. Sāyaṇa tries to reconcile this with the received notion of creation in a series (viz. that from ātma came the akāsa, and from the akāsa the wind, from the wind fire, etc.), by saying that this was the order in which things were created, but the development of the world was like a flash of lightning, so that the series could not be distinguished.]

³ The word tiraschinah, "across," perhaps refers to the tiraksrotas, "that in which the stream of life is horizontal," i.e. the animal world. The epithets in the second line of the verse are unusual and obscure; according to Sāyaṇa, the meaning is that among the created objects some were living creatures, others were great, as the sky, etc., the former being the enjoyers (bhoktād, the latter the things to be enjoyed (bhojyād), so the creation was distinguished as the food and the feeder. The verse occurs Yajush, XXXIII. 74, where Mahādhāra gives it several different interpretations, none more intelligible than those of Sāyaṇa.

6. Who really knows? who in this world may declare it? whence was this creation, whence was it engendered? ¹ The gods (were) subsequent to the (world's) creation; so who knows whence it arose?

7. He from whom this creation arose, he may uphold it, or he may not (no one else can); he who is its superintendent in the highest heaven, he assuredly knows, or if he knows not (no one else does).²

Śūktā II. (CXXX.)

The subject of the hymn is creation, therefore Prajāpati is the deity; the Rishi is Yaśña, the son of Prajāpati, the metre of the first verse is Ṣagāṭi, of the rest Tristubh.

1. The sacrifice which is extended on every side Varga XVIII. by the threads (of created things) spread out by the worship of the gods for a hundred and one (years), these our progenitors, who have preceded us, weave it, weaving forwards, weaving backwards, ³ they worship (Prajāpati) when (the world) is woven.

¹ i.e. from what material cause, and from what creative cause, did it arise?

² Sāyaṇa’s commentary on this śūkta is very elaborate, but it is evidently influenced by the Vedāntism of a later period. Although, no doubt, of high antiquity, the hymn appears to be less of a primary than of secondary origin, being in fact a controversial composition levelled especially against the Śāṅkhyā theory.

³ By combining the superior and inferior weaving, that is,
